The committee is of opinion that it will be im-precitable to avoid holding two Conventions, and that the purposes of this Convention are not of sufficient importance to justify calling for another country delegations, and therefore suggests that each

ONE of the morals drawn by the Bosto engraft upon our system the English idea and practice of ministerial responsibility. "If Secretary Belknap," it remarks, "had twice a week stood upon the floor of the House, could be have been for years in the receipt of a corrupt and fraudulent income? If Secretary Fish were taking part in the debates of the Senate, could Seneral Schenck have remained for a year in London in the odor of the Emma mine? Publicity (in advance) and responsibility are the two pieces of artillery upon the spirit of corruption." The suggestion will do to think about.

Capital Punishment.

Capital Punishment.

Eitors Intelligencer.

I see in your issue of the 9th inst., a brief article headed "Capital Punishment." The writer institutes a comparison between the death-penalty and imprisonment for life. In his charity he advocates the latter as being much more humane and in accordance with the spirit and letter of the Gospel. Such reasoning, however well meant, is more than questionable. That government, be it human or divine, is neither wise, just nor benevolent that does not, when it can provide the greatest possible security of provide the greatest possible security of life to its subjects. The highest possible security for life, is life for life. "Whoso sheddeth man's blood by man shall his blood be shed, for in the image of God made He man." The reason of the penblood be shed, for in the image of God made He man." The reason of the pensity is made commensurate with all time. He who enacted this penal law was most wise, just and benevolent. What is it that a man hath that he would not rather surrender than life? All that a man hath with he not give for his life? If the certain forfeiture of life for the life taken will not stay the hand of the nurleyer. certain forfeiture of life for the life taken, will not stay the hand of the murderer, That the voters of the country are rein vain shall we resort to any penalty less sponsible for the existence of a legalized terrible. When or where he preached cannot be definitely said, but a fair presumption is, that it was in the first or second year of the settlement of the State. 1785-6 he was one of the preachers on the fanous old "Reddone Circuit"—The first, and for a long time, the only circuit was formed called Ohio, from its extending to the river of that name. Cheap Times the Time to Build. We publish an exhaustive article upor the activity displayed during the past year in the construction of new iron and steel works and the enlargement of old gress at this time, when the iron trade is suffering from unremunerative prices, exists in the fact that all items entering into the cost of building are lower now than they have been for many years. Much of the growth in capacity is due to the influences which have led well-established firms, having the necessary capital and business inducements to make extenand business inducements to make extensions to their works. In other cases manufacturers have sought to diversify their product to enable them to endure more easily any temporary over-production and resulting stagnation in any one branch of the rron trade. Others again have concluded to manufacture the raw material instead of buying and finishing a partly advanced product. Changes of this character are taking place throughout the country, and in a few years will result in the building up of many mammoth establishments, every one of which will have its own furnaces, rolling mills and repair shops, with perhaps a sail facand repair shops, with perhaps a nail fac-tory, a serew factory, a shovel factory, or some other minor manufacture as an ap-The new works, have perhaps, without

The new works, have perhaps, without exception, been wisely located and properly constructed after careful deliberation. Furnaces are near ore banks and coal fields, and do not suffer for facilities of transportation. Rolling mills are generally by the side of furnaces, and enjoy all the advantages arising from such proximity. New and improved processes have been introduced. Our ironmasters have been very generally disposed to introduce the latest improvements and to sources for manufacturing all the iron and steel we can use; and the present era of dull times is teaching us to take advantage of everything that will enable us to turn out these products more economi-while strong firms have been making While strong firms have been making additions to their facilities and improvements in their plants, many others, we regret to say, have become hopelessly bank-rupt. Bad debts, the rapid decline of prices, and the continuance of manufacture at a loss, in the hope of a speedy trade recovery, has been the cause of the failure of many concerns, which, being properly located and carefully built, will be put in operation by other parties. There are other establishments, howevar, which have been built by inexperienced persons in out-of-the-way places, far from the raw material and remote from market and in consequence of the decline from the raw material and remote from market and in consequence of the decline in prices have succumbed to financial pressure and been hopelessly closed. Their owners may not in our day expect such an advance in prices that they can run them at a profit.

Prices are now so low that every consumer of tron has every inducement to rint item at a profit.

Prices are now so low that every consumer of iron has every inducement to buy. The railroads have generally awakened to this fact, and quite recently some large operations by leading railroad companies have been reported. The New York Central has purchased thousands of tons of steel rails; the Union Pacific has ordered a large number of locomotives; the Pennsylvania has been very liberally buying steel and iron rails, cars and locomotives; and other roads have followed these examples. Old roads that have been imperfectly equipped can now buy everything they need much lower than before, and there is no good reason why all of them should not take advantage of these low prices. Contemplated roads can now be built at less cost than at any time for many years past, even if at any time for many years past, even if they were to be furnished with steel rails and first-class rolling stock. It cannot in the nature of things, be expected that the present low prices will always conthe present low prices will always continue. A year, two years, three years hence all these railroad supplies may cost from 10 to 20 per cent more than they do to-day, and a wise policy should dictate to railroad managers that this is the time to buy. The iron works of this country are now able to meet every demand that may be made for their products. Railroad managers, too, should not forget that busy times among their on men add to the passenger and freight receipts from all who are in any way benefitted by the iron trade. There is no industry in the country which so quickly and fiberally reciprocates kind treatment as the business of making iron.

young man, 28 years of age, named Dwyer, was bitten by a snake between the thumb and the first finger of the right hand. The wound was received at 9 o'clock, and no treatment was applied until 11.30, when the patient was power-less and almost insensible. Ammoria was injected into his right arm, when he revived at once. He suffered a relapse, but the ammonia was again successfully applied, and he ultimately recovered. At Bungaree a young girl was bitten by a snake, and gradually sank into a state of support. Two hours and a half after she was bitten ammonia was injected. Relief was immediately obtained, and the girl rapidly recovered. A third case happened on the Acheron, 11 miles from Alexandria, where a little girl two years of age, the daughter of a farmer named Doak, was bitten by a snake just above the ankle of the left foot. Symptoms of complete coma were setting in when the ammonia injection was used with magical effect. The child sat upright and became quite lively.
